

Yes, we should be civic minded, reporting things we see to the proper authorities. Violators of the law should and must be punished. But for heavens sake, give a little along the way. Let the other person have rights too.

For some reason, in this day and age, we are splintered into faction groups, bent on destroying the rights of others, whether it be public smoking, free-speech, or religiosity.

Today there's not only two sides to every coin, but a lot of copper in between. The trick is think about what you are doing before you do it!

While an apology is acceptable human behavior on both parts, its better to wear the other person's shoes before you put your own into your mouth.

Believe it or not everyone has an opinion, even though we all have a right to have it. Think about the other person's rights. They got 'em too!

What's wrong with getting along with each other? Have a heart, let the other person have some room. Listen to their viewpoint, even if they are wrong, you might learn something.

Nobody ever learned anything with their mouth opened and ears closed. And, smile more, try it, it's good exercise. If you are not used to it, it will change your life and those around you. Its contagious too, who knows, maybe they will let you go ahead of them at the super market because you have just a few items. You may order my novel "Guilty of No Wrongdoing" at: Amazon.com

And: Booksamillion.com
And: Barnes and Noble.com and any book store of your choosing. Go on try it, you can't lose.

Talk about wrong-way wrongdoings what's-his-face, "Edsel," Perry, I never thought I'd say this, but Clinton's SecDef, Perry, went and done somthin' right. What? The hell you say!?!?

Yep, claims he done away with the dreaded MIL-Specs. Issued an order to that effect? Most folks are not holding their breaths though. Perry said his directive will kick in, confusing the hell out of us old DoD tar babies. Says we ought to go to commercial standards...?!?*@?!?

Innovative Contract Management, they call it. Smoke 'em if you got 'em, I guess. After the six months, it's suppose' to take a waver to use Mil-Stds. HUH???

Who da you thunk's gonna get screwed in the end?

You guessed it? You an' me gotta bend over again! No doubt in my mind! No siree, no doubt.

Speaking of right an' wrong, an' squirly things. Did you hear about NASDAQ's Black Monday? It happened. I swear it. Their stock market computers went zappo!!! Not only that, it was the 3rd time in less than one month. It wasn't a high class virus or a disgruntled employee. Just a squirrel chewing on power lines. Too many nutty dealings going on, I suppose. Attracting squirrels and all. Maybe they'er better off by using squirrels as brokers. At least I would'n'a lost so much money.

One time, NASDAQ's back-ups failed to work so they were down `most an hour. But then again, maybe the worldwide conspiracy TRIAD caused it.

The same thing happened in 1987 for 40-minutes. A fore runner of the real Black - Monday? Who knows? Anyways according to my calculations the biggy big one will hit soon. Don't bank on it!!!???

What can you do, dig a hole I guess? When it happens this time you can bet we'll find out what they mean by all that New World Order, or do they mean One-World Government?

So what's next?
