

What do you do in the morning, when your oblations are done? Me I mostly wander the erst whiles of my brain trying to figure out what day of the week it's gotten to be. I also come up with things to wonder about when I wandered... I ponder... maybe solve some things like where do weeds come from?

My wife says if you pull them they are gone, yet if that were so then there would be no weeds. Nothing for us to contend with but flowers and fruit. I hear ya out there and yes I too have succumbed to using weed killers.

There's a multitude of stuff with which to purchase that supposedly will kill specifically the things you hate and not the things you like. You can buy stuff that kills all stuff or stuff that only kills when you spray your stuff on stuff. That kind'a stuff only kills what it got on.

What's the definition of a weed and how does the stuff you buy know what stuff you want to kill and what you want to live with. We have a system at my house I plant and my wife plucks up what I planted because it looks like a weed.

I scour the hinterlands looking for wild flowers to save from destruction from the natural environment of the natural selection of the fittest. Some even survive my efforts until the all knowing horticulturist wife yanks them up and tosses them into the compost pile. It helps old people like us to have something to do, as if we need that.

Both of us suffer from a diminished capacity of the available time frame, you know there are never enough hours in the day to not get done what you thought you could'a got done if you weren't doing useless things because they seemed more important at the time.

Someone famous once said I spend all day doing nothing and still can't get it done. Have you ever felt that way... weeks go into days and so on.

Getting organized, now that's a real and proper goal. I have lists that contain lists and they are prioritized; but something happens to bump my personal definition of what's a weed and what's important enough to drop everything and what's in the get'er done category.

Ya ever read one of those get yourself organized in five minutes or less books? They are powerful but it don't work cause it ain't broke yet. I mean I'm a writer, photographer, artist and sometimes webmaster who never runs out of things to dream up to do.

One self help book suggested each time you got something done on your prioritized list you got to do something you really hate but know has to get done. This will make you happy the book says because you will get stuff you love and hate done in record time.

Hey! Try it, it actually works, if you remember to look at your list when you get up in the morning instead of before you go to bed to see what you shoulda been about instead of what you did. Keeps your old brain pumping at night making a here's look'n at you kid, you know looking through you eye lids 'til the morning comes then you can do it all over again and try staying sane.

Again I ask where do weeds come from? God's punishment... no His Wisdom with a purpose of teaching us humility.

So what's next...?
